APPLE CROP ESTIMATES STAY ABOUT THE SAME

Estimates as to the size of the 1959 Virginia apple crop haven't changed much in the past month.

Dr. H. A. Rollins, Jr., horticulturist at VPI, says it still looks like the crop will fall just short of last year's 11,000,000 bushels. Time will tell.

Fruit size is generally considered to be good even though a few growers expect their fruit to average slightly smaller than last year. Fruit color started to develop very well, but then faded during the August heat wave causing many growers to delay the harvest of Delicious apples.

Quality Good

Virginia growers have had their problems this season with both apple scab and leaf rollers, but have been able to keep the fruit damage caused by these pests at a minimum. In general the 1959 crop is a clean crop of good quality.

Generally, the "quality production phase" of the current season is about over. There is little the grower can do now to improve the quality of fruits in the orchard. The problem now, as harvest moves into high gear ,is to get the fruit off the trees, out of the orchards, and into the hands of the consumer with the least possible reduction in quality.

Harvest At Hand

Picking at the proper stage of maturity is one of the first and most important steps in maintaining quality. The season right now is about one week ahead of normal and the fruit is maturing rapidly. There are several important guides that will help determine the best harvest date for a particular variety of apples. Most of these are discussed in Circular 776, "When to Pick Virginia Apples," available from the county agents or from the VPI Horticultural Department, Blacksburg.

Another important step in any quality maintenance program is to prevent fruit bruising. It has been estimated that Virginia growers lose $1,000,000 or more each year as a direct result of fruit bruising. Bruising occurs all along the line from the time the fruit is removed from the tree until it reaches the consumer.

Dr Rollins says it would pay all growers to check all phases of harvest and handling operations, paying particular attention to those places where bruising may occur.

In Fashion Now

Statisticians claim that 60 per cent of all the women in America are short-waisted and from 5 to 20 pounds overweight. The problem of how to look smart looms large for any woman whose mirrow tells a different story from the fashion pictures which stare at her from the latest fashion magazines.

Your answer may lie in the half-size dresses. Find a half-size line of clothes that are becoming to you. This may take a bit of looking, but you will be delighted with the results.

When choosing your garments do not be afraid of color, but be sure it is properly routed to be non-fattening. For exaiaple, don't believe that all grays are fattening. Pearl gray, silver and gunmetal in most finishes and in very light weight but firm woolens are slenderizing. Red, green, and blue, mixed with just the right amount of depth, are highly becoming to the larger figure.

If your neck is short and your bust broad, choose a dress which concentrates its decoration between the shoulder and the bust. Avoid bulky collars and top-padded shoulders. Extended shoulders are important.

Avoid front zippers—they buckle on the fuller figures.

Give preference to tone-on-tone patterns. They are slimming. In general the effect of pattern should be small and verticle, not horizontal.

Birthday Celebration

On Sunday, September 6, the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Harvey was the scene of a reunion of members of the Harvey and Coleman families. They gathered to celebrate the birthdays of Mrs. Mazie Coleman Harvey and Mrs. Ida Harvey Morris. About sixty guests were present for the occasion. An hour of fellowship was enjoyed on the lawn, after which a bountiful picnic lunch was served in Old Virginia style.

Later on the guests assembled in the living-room, where Mrs. Harvey and Mrs. Morris opened the many lovely and attractive gifts of which they had been the recipients.

Another interesting feature of the occasion was the photographing of family groups by generations. This was done by means of a Polaroid Land Camera, and every one could see the pictures immediately.

Incidentally, there were four generations present.

About The Home

By Frances Dell

The new look in foundation plantings can be summed up by saying that outdoor planter boxes and tropical plant material have become most important.

Most of us have noted that outdoor planter boxes have become a definite part of the architectural structure of the house. Perhaps the most popular type is a low flagstone window box.

In the landscape architect's point of view, foundation plants serve a three-fold purpose. They act as a screen, hiding the awkward corner where the house foundation meets the soil. They provide a perfect tie-in between the house and garden, and when foliage plants are used, they serve as a backdrop for flowering shrubs.

Modern stpline calls for ornamentals that' have a neat, cleaneut look. Where the climate permits — tropicals are the most popular type of plant used. One of the most interesting of the new plants is the dwarf-growing podocarpus, known as the fern pine. Its effect is dramatic. The medium - sized plant forms a dark green tracery of soft fernlike, finely cut fronds.

The FatoLedera lizei is another new and popular foliage plant. It is a cross between the giant Fatsia japonica and English ivy. It is easily trained flat against a wall.

The best advice we can give you is to go to a reliable nurseryman in your locality and get him to suggest a number of plants that will do well in your location. Choose from this group and enjoy foundation plantings and outdoor planter boxes that utilize the best plant available to give your new or old home a smart new look.
